IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.

IS MY SLING SAFE?

Thank you for your concern. I have researched this, and have chosen a carrier that allows me to position my baby safely. The kind of carriers discussed in the CPSC warning ("bag slings") are different in several ways from this one: they don't allow the wearer to position a baby safely; they keep the wearer from seeing the baby when it's worn; they often aren't the correct size; and they've been known to be unsafe since 2006, yet the companies that make them have not recalled them voluntarily. The sling that I'm wearing is safe for the baby: I can see the face, the head isn't pushed forward onto the chest, the pouch isn't too deep, and the baby won't fall out. Please see http://babyslingsafety.blogspot.com or http://sleepingbaby.net/safety.php for more information.